EXPLANATIONS

This list of topics is the result of many years' experience in teaching ancient history in classes preparing for college entrance examinations. From quite small beginnings the list has grown to its present form. The compiler has been assured that it would be of service to others engaged in the same work, or in the study of Greek history for any purpose. This is the only excuse for publishing.

It is claimed for the list:

- 1. That it presents a full and systematic scheme for the study of Greek history by the topical method.
- 2. That it is adapted for use in accordance with the recommendations of the Conference Report in History in the Report of the Committee of Ten, and also of that of the report of the Conference on History made to the New England Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools in 1895, of the report of the University Conference on Uniform Entrance Requirements made in 1896, of the report of the Committee of Seven made in 1899, and with the latest entrance requirements adopted by our leading colleges.
- 3. That the references are ample and plain, but not so precise as to prevent the student from learning to find his own way in books of reference. The number of books referred to is large. The object is two-fold: (1) to broaden the student's view by the study of the same subject as presented by different writers; (2) to make it possible that those whose library resources are small shall nevertheless find some references of which they can avail themselves. Even in cases where most or all of the books are available, it is not expected that each student will consult all references. Judicious selections and assignments made by the teacher will secure breadth and variety in class work.

4. That the topics, with few exceptions, are adapted either to fluent recitations or to written exercises. The exceptions consist of lists of terms for explanation, of suggestions for map work, of analytical reviews, and of a geographical review.

Even the remotest subdivisions under each head may be used as individual topics; but, in case a more comprehensive topic is used, its subdivisions will serve as an outline for the oral or written exercise the student is to prepare.

- 5. That the list may readily be used with classes of younger students by making omissions which the teacher can easily indicate.
- 6. That the "Topics for Special Investigation" provide more serious work for those willing to undertake it.

It will be noticed that in some cases the topics either overlap each other or are substantially identical. This is deliberately done with the intention either of making each topic a perfect whole in itself, or of teaching the student to examine the subject from different points of view.

Although the compiler is aware that it is chronologically incorrect, it has seemed best to him to condense nearly all study of Greek social life, including literature and art, into one place. It is inserted at the close of the "Supremacy of Athens." Homeric subjects are, however, touched upon at the beginning, and oratory in the time of Demosthenes.

A short list of historical fiction, tales, poetry and drama is inserted just before the Index.

EXPLANATIONS

This list of topics is the result of many years' experience in teaching ancient history in classes preparing for college entrance examinations. From quite small beginnings the list has grown to its present form. The compiler has been assured that it would be of service to others engaged in the same work, or in the study of Roman history for any purpose. This is his only excuse for publishing.

It is claimed for the list:

- 1. That it presents a full and systematic scheme for the study of Roman history by the topical method.
- 2. That it is adapted for use in accordance with the recommendations of the Conference Report in History in the Report of the Committee of Ten (1892), of the report of the Conference on History made to the New England Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools in 1895, of the report of the University Conferences on Uniform Entrance Requirements made in 1896, of the report of the Committee of Seven made in 1899, and with the latest entrance requirements adopted by our leading colleges.
- 3. That the references are ample and plain, but not so precise as to prevent the student from learning to find his own way in books of reference. The number of books referred to is large. The object is two-fold: (1) to broaden the student's view by the study of the same subject as presented by different writers; (2) to make it possible that those whose library resources are small shall nevertheless find some references of which they can avail themselves. Even in cases where most or all of the books are available, it is not expected that each student will consult all references.

Judicious selections and assignments made by the teacher will secure breadth and variety in class work.

4. That the topics, with few exceptions, are adapted either to fluent recitations or to written exercises. The exceptions consist of lists of terms for explanation, of suggestions for map work, of analytical reviews, and of a geographical review.

Even the remotest subdivisions under each head may be used as individual topics; but, in case a more comprehensive topic is used, its subdivisions will serve as an outline for the oral or written exercise the student is to prepare.

- 5. That the list may readily be used with classes of younger students by making omissions which the teacher can easily indicate.
- 6. That the "Topics for Special Investigation" provide more serious work for those willing to undertake it.

It will be noticed that in some cases the topics either overlap each other or are substantially identical. This is deliberately done with the intention either of making each topic a perfect whole in itself, or of leading the student to examine the subject from different points of view.

Although the compiler is aware that it is chronologically incorrect, it has seemed best to him to condense most of the study of Roman social and private life and art into one place—the Augustan age—and the study of literature into two places, the so-called Augustan and Silver Ages.

A short list of historical fiction, tales, poetry and drama is inserted before the Index.

History of Greece FOR HIGH SCHOOLS AND ACADEMIES

By GEORGE WILLIS BOTSFORD, Ph.D.

Instructor in the History of Greece and Rome in Harvard University

8vo. Half Leather, $1.10 net

"In all matters of outward form—in text-page, marginal notes, illustrations, maps, and in every point of typography—the book is distinctly superior to its class, and, indeed, may well serve as a model for other school-books. In the literary treatment of the subject, and in everything relating to a sense of proportion and perspective, the work is capitally well done."-The Outlook.

"It is . . . a scholarly treatment of the subject by one whose ample experience and eminent position as an educator are assurances of the excellence of his work. It would not be easy to suggest anything more to give completeness to this valuable volume." -Home Journal. New York City.

A History of Rome TO THE BATTLE

By EVELYN SHIRLEY SHUCKBURGH, M.A.

With Maps and Plans. Small 8vo. Cloth. $1.75

"Mr. Shuckburgh's work is to be commended for its scholarly accuracy, as well as for its comprehensiveness and lucidity. As a brief manual of the subject it has qualities which render it superior to any of its predecessors in the same field."

"His method of treatment is admirable, his style is clear, his grouping of facts accurate, and his work is in every respect, especially in arrangement, and in its exhaustive index, adapted for school-book use as well as for the general reader." -Boston Daily Advertiser.
